Building the new British resistance

There has been a substantial and growing chorus of members and supporters clammering for Britain First to launch a political wing in order for our movement to field election candidates. Whilst Britain First at heart rejects the establishment-crafted never-ending circus of rigged elections, we do understand the importance of certain elections and the benefits they can bring.

Whilst we need to stop pretending that a tiny handful of powerless councillors is a mighty achievement and that small, fleeting 'breakthroughs' are going to save our nation, elections of a certain kind can and do have a place in the fight to save our country.

Total concentration of on elections at the expense of other endeavours will always end in failure. Fifty years of toil, sweat and effort by the patriotic movement in this country has ended in disaster: nationalism is now tiny, powerless, impotent and disintegrating. We need a new approach, and fast.

The total emphasis on elections effectively blocks any move towards becoming a diverse and multi-faceted 'movement' – instead, nationalists play the establishment's game. This failed approach channels our energy, willpower and determination into a rigged electoral 'dead end' that usually ends in failure and disappointment, leading to infighting, splits and civil wars. This vicious cycle has to stop. We intend to 'use' the political system in this country in a cynical fashion to our own advantage. We do NOT intend to be sucked into the political rat-race using up all our energies to obtain derisory results that will shatter morale and turn us against one another. The electoral rat-race is similar to Spanish bullfighting, where the matador dangles a red rag in front of a feisty bull - the bull's endeavours always end in frustration and failure. Unfortunately, nationalism is always the bull, the establishment the matador and the red rag is 'elections'. Chasing the red rag and inviting a constant stream of failure and frustration is counter-productive and a recipe for disaster.

Nationalism must change course. We must start from the bottom up, rather than chasing the big – albeit appetizing – electoral prizes that are, unfortunately, unattainable, due to the dominance of the mass media and the entrenched strength of the establishment.

Building local branches engaged in grassroots community politics must be priority number one - everything else is academic unless this is achieved!

The local branches of Britain First will concentrate on community politics, on winning the support of our neighbours with relentless community activism and leadership – in much the same way that other dynamic and successful movements have done. Building community support gives you a solid base that will translate into electoral success. Building branches that 'take-over' local areas requires hard work, and above all training and education.

There is no other credible route for us to take. Ever wondered why our neighbourhoods are colonised so easily? Ever wonder why any successes we ever achieve evaporates so easily? It is because we have never built a substantial constituency of community support around the country (apart from a few exceptions). We must act as the leaders of our communities before we are even elected.

Community politics must be a constant, never-ending endeavour, lasting all year round and never ceasing. But Britain First understands that standing for election and, in some cases, getting elected, at local level, is very important and helps to building the nationwide community support we need. This is why we have decided to launch a political wing of the movement. We will make an announcement very soon on this front, lest to say that the registration process has begun and the ball is now rolling. Rule Britannia!

Summer 2011: expansion, appointments and initiatives

Britain First is growing rapidly in size and breadth around the country, with new branches and new appointments happening on an almost daily basis.

We are pleased to announce the appointment of veteran patriotic activist and organiser, Gary Raikes – for many years the regional organiser of nationalism in Scotland – to the post of Britain First Coordinator for Scotland.

Gary intends to build an organisation covering Scotland, to hold meetings and initiate activities for our campaigns. "By joining and campaigning with Britain First you will no longer have to defend the past actions of any party individual. You won't be tripped up by questions over what someone said fifteen years ago, and you won't have to defend the indefensible," said Gary.

The ranks of Britain First have also been strengthened with the addition of Cllr Kevin Edwards as Coordinator for Wales. Mr Edwards is a community councillor and patriotic activist of many years. Mr Edwards has volunteered to establish a Britain First organisation covering Wales: "I am delighted to be joining Britain First and am pleased to now declare myself as a Britain First Councillor. In the end the decision to come on board to such a fresh, determined and professional movement was relatively easy."

Recently, Britain First took a major leap forward by establishing a professional call centre to help boost recruitment (pictured left). This professional operation has led to a dramatic increase in the new members flooding into Britain First.

We are also pleased to announce the launch of the 'Britain First Servicemen's Association'. The new group will be a home for the many servicemen that have swelled the ranks of Britain First recently. The new group will be led by David Lloyd (pictured above), from Sussex in the South East. Mr Lloyd entered the armed forces in 1975, and became active in '2 SQN R.A.F Regiment'. From 1977 his squadron did two tours in Northern Ireland and he was awarded the general service medal with clasp for active service. You can reach the new veterans' group by emailing: veterans@britainfirst.org

August Riots: multicultural Britain descends into chaos

By Kevin Edwards - The recent 'English riots' (as described by the liberal media, even though hardly any English people took part) were the latest saga in Britain's degeneration from a homogenous, indigenous, peaceful, law-abiding community to a third-world, rootless, lawless society.

The liberal media has made extravagant efforts to disguise or hide various aspects of the riots, but mostly the fact that the overwhelming majority of perpetrators were black. (See image top right, of black gang attacking a white journalist, and alongside, of a black racist forcing a young English lad to strip). Inner cities or suburban towns with large black communities formed the epicentres of the riots. Yes, a small number of white trash tag-a-longs engaged in looting alongside the black rioters, but the reality was there for all to see.

Great Britain used to be a peaceful, pleasant country. It was a place where you could leave your doors unlocked, where policemen were respected, and British youngsters – the next generation – were a credit to the nation. By the time the riots had subsided, London, Bristol, Nottingham, Gloucester, Salford, Liverpool and Birmingham all bore the scars of looting and Third World criminality.

The disorder in our formerly peaceful cities is an ominous sign of things to come. The root cause of the riots is not unemployment, the recession, disillusionment, or any other media excuses. The riots are the direct consequence of mass immigration and the colonisation of our homeland by millions of immigrants. The riots were the opening salvos of the terrible future that awaits our people when we become a minority in our own land. It is about time the police were allowed to protect the public without fear of prosecution by the forces of political correctness. The police must be given carte blanche to bring law and order back to the streets of Britain, and to do this, the politicians and the media must untie their hands. As expected, some black 'leaders' described the rioting as a 'community uprising' – it was not. It was barbaric, Third World behaviour at its worst, and mirrors what happens on a regular basis in some American cities with large black communities.

Perhaps the most interesting development to arise from the 'English riots' was the mobilisation of several communities to defend themselves, their businesses and their property. For example, in Enfield and Eltham, the native white English communities organised street patrols. One local Englishman said, "We're sickened by the police doing absolutely nothing... They're not policing our streets, we have to police them." Likewise, in Southall, hundreds of Sikh men stood guard outside their temple and patrolled the streets, and Muslim street patrols were organised in Hackney, East London.

The Scottish independence debate creates a storm

By Gary Raikes - The debate over 'Scottish independence' has gathered pace since the Scottish National Party's major victory in the May elections. Worm-tongue EU federalist, Alex Salmond (pictured above), leader of the SNP, has been accused of stifling the 'debate' on independence because the true costs of his core policy would alarm most Scots and place his scheme in jeopardy.

Britain First is implacably opposed to any trends, policies or organisations that undermine the Union of the true British peoples of these islands. Whilst we support the maintenance, preservation and promotion of the individual native cultures of England, Scotland, Wales and Ulster, we are a Unionist movement and petty-minded bigots who crave division are not welcome in our organisation. Recently, Britain First Scotland announced a major recruitment drive centred on a campaign to keep Scotland within the United Kingdom (leaflet pictured right).

Alex Salmond, who refers to immigrants in Scotland as 'New Scots', is an arch EU federalist who would simply transfer any newly won Scottish independence to Brussels. His ultimate goal is to turn Scotland into a multicultural EU province.

It is in Scotland's interests to remain within the UK for overall defence purposes: Scots, English, Welsh and Irish soldiers have fought side by side for hundreds of years to defend the British Isles, and this situation must remain.

There is a gap between public spending in Scotland (£40bn) and revenue raised in Scotland (£27bn). A hypothetical independent Scottish government would have to choose between higher taxes and cuts in public services. Scottish gas and oil will only last another 40 years, and then the gigantic Scottish budget deficit will catapult the country into crippling bankruptcy.

During the election campaign, the Scottish Labour Party attempted to cost the SNP goal of quitting the UK. It came to the conclusion that there would be an ongoing structural budget deficit of £14bn a year. Scots must recognise that devolution has put England at a disadvantage and that satisfying English grievances would put the marriage back on an even keel and undermine any separatist tendencies. It is in Scotland's interests to maintain a strong partnership with the other nations in the UK. Scots, English, Welsh and Irish have traded, explored, conquered and fought side by side for hundreds of years to build this small collection of nations into a mighty power.

Since 1707, Scotland and its neighbours have been strengthened by working together as one country in sacred partnership for over 300 years now. The United Kingdom works – let's fight to keep it that way for our children's sake.

Understanding Britain's demographic catastrophe

By Paul Golding - 'Demographics' is the study of change in any given population, taking into account indicators such as race, gender, age and so on. By monitoring demographics, we can see if the racial composition of a population changes, or if the average age increases, to give a few examples.

Britain is heading for a demographic disaster. Demographic disasters rarely reveal themselves over time gradually - they creep up slowly and before you realise, your country is depopulated and your nation is on the verge of extinction. The importance of demographics supersedes everything else. Unless a nation repopulates itself by bearing a certain amount of children, it will wither and disappear. This is not someone's opinion - it is an immutable FACT.

To simply maintain itself, without becoming extinct, the British people must maintain a birth rate of 2.1 children. The 0.1 is a 5% buffer that takes into account deaths, homosexuality or infertility, whereas the 2.0 is intended to replace both adults. A birth rate of 2.1 will mean that, on average, the population will remain relatively static.

According to the American Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) the projected birth rate for the United Kingdom in 2011 will be 1.9 children, but this figure includes non-

The indigenous white population of Britain is shrinking, whilst immigrant communities are rapidly expanding, particularly the Muslim population. This is a reality we cannot escape from - soon we will be outnumbered!

indigenous ethnic groups (Muslims and Africans) who have much higher birth rates than the native British people. The birth rate for the native white British people is estimated (being generous) at 1.4, but even then a certain degree of further scrutiny is required: the difference between generations. The generation of young Brits born in the 70s, 80s and 90s has a much lower birth rate than those born in the 50s and 60s. An estimate of the birth rate for the latest generation of Brits is even lower, at 1.0 children.

While these figures can be confusing, there are ways to simplify the situation: with a replacement rate of 1.0 children per British female, the next generation of Brits appearing over the next 25 years will be HALF the size of the last generation, and if the next generation maintains the 1.0 replacement rate, that means that within the next 50 years (roughly 2 generations) the population of native British people in these islands will decrease by roughly 60-75%.

During this period of rapid depopulation, the foreign communities in Britain will be increasing rapidly. The Muslim birth rate, for example, is around 5.0 children per female. Ethnic minorities will become the majority, and the British people will become a minority. In the next issue of Sovereignty, we will publish the results of a major investigation into the forthcoming demographic disaster that will engulf Britain over the next 25 years.

The EU project in jeopardy: eurozone on brink of collapse

By Tom Gower - The EU elite met in Marseille recently to demand greater “fiscal union” in response to the European sovereign debt and currency crisis. “I think it is on the cards that there may be a treaty change [replacing the Lisbon Treaty] imposed in the next year or two, beyond what has already been proposed,” said chancellor George Osborne.

What this translates to in layman’s terms, is that a new treaty is on the horizon that will imposed almost total and universal financial/economic control over the twenty-seven EU member states in response to the crisis. In such a scenario, Britain’s vetoes would be meaningless, leaving us powerless to oppose harmful EU economic and budget policies designed to favour our EU neighbours. The seventeen nations that are in the eurozone will simply vote in unison as a block leaving Britain and other non-Euro nations marginalised.

An EU bailout fund is in preparation, one that Britain will be expected to contribute heavily to, despite our own mammoth problems at home. This bailout fund will be used to artificially prop-up the failed economies of southern Europe, countries such as Spain, Italy, Greece and Portugal. The entire EU project is quickly descending into unproductive, debt-laden farce. Reality flies in the face of Cameron’s recent call for a move towards a ‘United States of Europe’. Britain needs to reassert her economic and political sovereignty if she is to survive the coming economic storm.

German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder has also accused Britain of responsibility for the “biggest problems” facing the EU. Ignoring the insurmountable problems of forcing diverging economies into a straight jacket of red tape, regulation and fiscal union, Mr Schroeder called for a “United States of Europe”. He said: “Great Britain causes the biggest problems. It is not in the euro but the British always want to have a say in the shaping of the economic bloc... One must practice the renouncement of national sovereignty. From the European Commission, we should make a government which would be supervised by the European Parliament. And that means the United States of Europe.”

These kind of quotes can leave you speechless – after two World Wars and millions dead, just seventy years after the cessation of the last conflict, Europe again stands on the brink of a unified, totalitarian European super-state. Meanwhile, it has emerged that Deputy Prime Minister Nick Clegg has described the EU as “undemocratic as North Korea”. He also once condemned the overweening influence of the EU and the “grubby political deals” cut in the “corridors and bars” of Brussels.

Britain First has recently joined the national campaign to demand a referendum on Britain’s membership of the European Union (leaflet pictured left).

Protect the British people: ‘Deport Muslim Extremists’

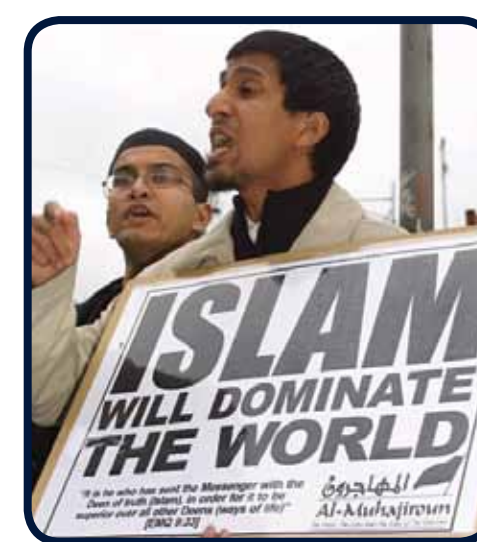

By Paul Golding - Recently, a new crop of Islamic extremists were arrested and charged with terrorism offences, including a suspected suicide bombing campaign. The six men, all from Birmingham and all dedicated Islamic extremists, were accused of preparing acts of terrorism, including travelling to Pakistan for terrorist training, making a ‘martyrdom’ video and planning a bombing campaign.

These latest arrests are just the tip of the iceberg - thousands of Muslim extremists are at liberty in Britain, preaching hatred against Britain and our way of life. The liberal elite’s tolerance (even indulgence) of militant Islam cannot be allowed to continue - for too long now, these ungrateful foreign guests have abused our hospitality.

Britain First is calling for all Muslim extremists to be deported from Britain immediately. Anyone who has links to Islamic extremist organisations, anyone who has trained in Afghanistan or Pakistan, anyone who preaches hatred against Britain, must be deported to their country of origin - no exceptions.

The latest arrests come on top of the campaign launched by a Muslim extremist group to turn twelve British cities into independent Islamic states. The so-called ‘Islamic Emirates’ would function as autonomous enclaves ruled by Islamic Sharia law.

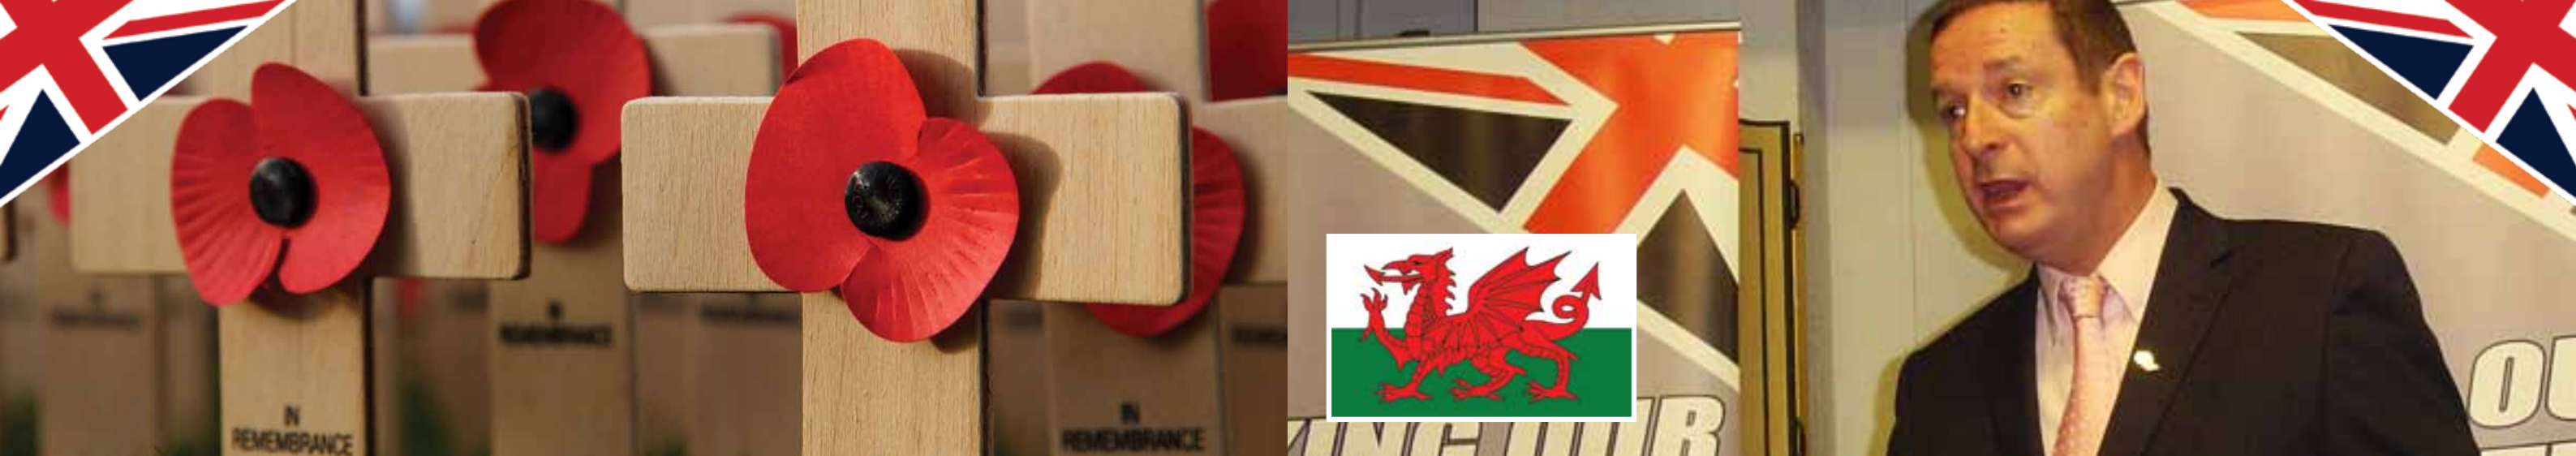

The ‘Islamic Emirates Project’, launched by the ‘Muslims Against the Crusades’ group, names the British cities of Birmingham, Bradford, Derby, Dewsbury, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, Luton, Manchester, Sheffield, as well as Waltham Forest and Tower Hamlets in London as territories for Sharia rule. The project was launched exactly six years after Muslim suicide bombers killed 52 people and injured 800 others in London. An announcement posted on the Muslims Against the Crusades website, states:

“What was once a predominantly Christian country has now been overwhelmed by a rising Muslim population, which seeks to preserve its Islamic identity, and protect itself from the satanic values of the tyrannical British government. There are now over 2.8 million Muslims living in the United Kingdom... indeed the entire infrastructure of Britain is changing; Mosques, Islamic Schools, Shari’ah Courts and Muslim owned businesses, have now become an integral part of the British landscape.”

Britain First is directed and driven by its members and supporters. We are unique in that our campaigns are decided by our supporters using our novel ‘Suggest a Campaign’ forum - the top idea on our campaigns forum was ‘Deport Fundamentalist Muslims’ (270 votes), so we took heed of what our members and supporters wanted and launched a ‘Deport Muslim Extremists’ campaign. This campaign is what YOU wanted, so let’s make it a success!

Remembrance Sunday: what does it mean to nationalists?

By Jim Dowson - Weaned as a patriot on my mother's knee, enrolled in the Sunday school and Boys Brigade at age five, it was always an integral and sacred duty for me to pay homage to the hallowed marble obelisk in my town where the hundreds of names, including several of my own family, were inscribed under the banner "The Glorious Dead".

Even as a small child I understood that this place and these names were 'special' - revered and always to be honored by my solemn presence, silent and head bowed, whenever I was in its vicinity.

In my forty seven years on earth I have never missed a Remembrance Sunday: neither hospitalization, illness or bereavement has thus far prevented me in fulfilling my sacred contractual obligation to my forebears. They willingly sacrificed their young lives so that I could live and in return I have a personal duty to not only remember and honour their sacrifice but to keep alive their memory in my generation and time on this earth.

This minimum requirement from us to our glorious dead patriots once a year seems a small, even an insignificant act, compared to what whole generations suffered that we may live free. Yet, many, many young people - even nationalists - make little effort to attend any Remembrance Sunday events. Look at the faces on TV or in the press when crowds are filmed or photographed at these events. How many young faces are in the crowd?

How many parents are there with their children, educating the next generation in the ways of our people, our struggles, pains, past glories and sacrifice? Is this lack of interest and duty towards our past heroes the reason why our people seem asleep today despite being confronted with mass colonization, racial violence and a demographic collapse compounded by Islamic conquest.

After all, if our people cannot honour our past, do they care about our future? Indeed do they even care about their own future or their children's future? The lack of respect towards our war dead is a truly shameful thing, but as patriots we must ask ourselves: did I resolutely ensure that my children accompanied me to the war memorial every November?

Did I, as a father or mother, instruct my children in our history of blood, sweat and tears and the selfless sacrifices made for us by previous generations of our people?

If you are not to be found in solemn silence at your local cenotaph this November 13th (life threatening illness withstanding) then one has no right criticizing our young people's lack of respect for our history, culture or nation. Respect is taught and passed down from one generation to the next. So if this generation is disrespectful, unpatriotic and disinterested, surely we must look to our generation for answers and perhaps even examine ourselves before we castigate others.

Britain First local campaigns: 'Justice 4 Linda Lewis'

It is almost exactly three years to the day that I was invited to attend a public meeting in Port Talbot. The theme of the meeting was to highlight and produce evidence regarding the illegal removal of a sick and frail local twelve-year-old girl from the care of her mother and grandfather by Neath and Port Talbot Social Services. She was removed from her hospital bed in America, at gunpoint, to cover up for serious medical negligence issues here in the UK.

The evidence was overwhelming - everything that has been done to this family is illegal: an illegal, botched and unnecessary operation performed by Neath General Hospital who removed the child's healthy appendix, something that resulted in septicaemia (that nearly killed her); constant misdiagnosis by hospitals, doctors and paediatricians; the removal of the child from America on a false passport under an 'assumed name'; no valid legal documentation i.e. no 'Recovery Order' for the child's return to the UK was ever issued, and false and fraudulent information was given to the Foreign Office. The list goes on and on.

I have attended court on several occasions along with the Lewis family. The courts, judges, barristers and the police have all colluded together to keep this case hidden to prevent the truth emerging.
